HISTORIC AMERICAN BUILDINGS SURVEY

PIAGET-VAN RAVENSWAAY COLLECTION

HABS NO. MO-1800

The Piaget-van Ravenswaay Survey consists of a number of photographs, primarily of sites and structures in Missouri, which were taken before 1938 by Alexander Piaget and after that by Paul Piaget, both in conjunction with Charlee van Ravenswaay. The Survey was incorporated into the Historic American Buildings Survey (HABS) collection, housed in the Library of Congress, in 1985 by Laura Rupp and in 1986 by Deborah Fulton, HABS historians.

Following ie a history of the Piaget-van Ravenswaay Survey written by Charles van Ravenewaay.

HISTORY OF THE PIAGET-VAN RAVENSWAAY PHOTOGRAPHIC COLLECTION

OF EARLY MISSOURI BUILDINGS AND RELATED SUBJECTS

by Charlea van Ravenswaay
Wilmington, Delaware
October, 1986

The Piaget-van Ravenswaay Photographic Collection of Early Missouri Buildings and Related Subjects had its inception about 1931 with photography being continued intermittently into the 1970s. Tha project grew from the interest of Alexander Edward Piagat (1898-1938) and me in Miaeouri's legacy of buildings constructed by the French, Germanic, Anglo-American and other cultural and racial groups, and subdivisions of those groupa, that had settled the state beginning in the eighteenth century. We were concérned by how rapidly and thoughtlessly those buildings were being deatroyed and that no effort was being made to record that heritage before it was loat. Our project wae informally conceived and carried forward without a sponsor and at our own expense.. Little thought waa given to the ultimate disposition of the collection; that came much later.

During my years of collaboration with members of the Piaget family in St. Louia, we worked together harmoniously and with a common purpose. The ultimate success of our efforts was due principally to the artietry and technical skill of Alex (as he was familiarly known) and of his younger brother Paul. My role waa largely supportiva; I eerved as guide, selected the subjecta to be recorded, aaaembled information when available and, with the advice and encouragemant of the Piaget brothers, supplemented thair additions to our collection with photographe I took on my individual tripe around the state and those which I had made in connection with varioua reasearch and publishing projects. I could not claim then or later any photographic skill approaching that of the Piagets but I was able to photograph many subjects which would not have been recorded otherwise.

In retrospect our project seems an improbable happening, given conditions during the depression years and particularly the stranger-than-fiction story of the Piaget family and how the two brothers became photographers in St. Louis.

New Orleans had been the home of the Piaget family since the eighteenth century and there Guy Alexander Piaget, the father of my St. Louis friends, was born. After being educated as a civil engineer in Switzerland, he returned to his native city but an attack of yellow fever resulted in his need to move to a temperate and unchanging climate. He chose Temascaltepec, a village in the Sierra mountains, some 300 miles south of Mexico City. There he became the owner of various businesses including an important silver mine. He married Virginia Gomez of a Mexican family and in time the couple had a family of four sons and three daughters. Life was pleasant and secure at their remote hacienda with its many servants, horses, gardens, and other aspects of a leisured way of life until the outbreak of the Villa revolution in 1915 when bandits roamed the countryside murdering and robbing. The Piagets lost all of their property, the father was crippled by a stroke, and only through the intervention of the Swiss consul in Mexico City were the lives of the parents saved.

The family found refuge in the capital where they lived as best they could on work found by the sons. In 1918 Alexander, the eldest son, came to find work in St. Louis, a city that had been fabled in Mexico since the St. Louis World's Fair of 1904 (the Louisiana Purchase Exposition). Alexander could not speak English, his eyesight was so poor that he wore glasses with thick lenses, and he had no trade or obvious skills, but somehow this unprepossessing young man found menial work and from that base he gradually improved his situation. An interest in photography led to his buying a cheap box camera and patiently learning to take and develop photographs. By 1925 he was sufficiently expert to become the staff photographer at the St. Louis City Art Museum. By 1929 he had opened his own studio as a commercial photographer.

Encouraged by his growing success, Alexander brought his family from Mexico: his widowed mother (his father had died in 1923), his sisters Juanita and Lucille, and his three brothers, Carlos B., August G., and Paul. Under Alexander's tutelage, the brothers became adept at various photographic specialities and worked as a team at the increasingly successful studio.

My association with Alex came about through my interest in Missouri's early buildings along with an interest in the state's cultural history. I have Missouri roots that extend back to frontier days and I grew up in an historic house in the historic town of Boonville near the center of the state. While completing my graduate work at Washington University, St. Louis, I began contributing photographs of early buildings to the Missouri Historical Society. At that time Alex was becoming favorably known in the St. Louis area for his sensitive photos of old buildings published in the rotogravure section of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. I enjoyed these articles but the thought of joining efforts with him never occurred to me; fortunately it did occur to Mrs. Antoinette Harney Beauregard, then archivist at the Missouri Historical Society, and a most remarkable lady. She suggested that I might use my knowledge of old buildings and of the state's past to aid Piaget in locating and identifying subjects to photograph. The two of us met, discussed the idea, and Alex liked the suggestions. We agreed that whenever we found a free day or two we would go on field trips. Our primary objective then and later was to record structures. Later, as significant examples of the regional fine and decorative arts, or ornamental ironwork and stone carving, were found, we photographed them too. Nor did we restrict ourselves just to subjects in Missouri but included historic towns along the east bank of the Mississippi River in Illinois: Cahokia, Kaskaskia, Columbia, Waterloo, Quincy, and Nauvoo, among others. Sometimes a face or a landscape caught our interest and was photographed.

We had no lists of early buildings to guide us; the subjects we recorded were either those which local residents directed us to, or those which we discovered in driving about the countryside. We were never able to cover all sections of the state, nor were our trips systematically planned. Nevertheless, in time we visited most of the older communities. With only a very few exceptions, the buildings we recorded dated before about 1870.

Our expeditions were pleasant and adventuresome diversions for both of us and, for me, it was a privilege to work with Alex. He had a quiet, gentle disposition, and a remarkable artistic sense combined with photographic expertise.

During the early 1930s historic preservation was little known and little practised in the Middle West. Most Missourians were eager to replace their old homes or store buildings with something new and up-to-date. But the beginnings of interest existed in the cities and towns, and people everywhere aided and encouraged us.

At that time strangers were seldom viewed with suspicion. In our travels, when we came upon an interesting old house or other building, we would stop, seek the occupant or owner, and explain our mission. Invariably we -- two strangers -- were given permission to wander through the house and to photograph as we wished, often moving furniture and objects for better compositions. Frequently these friendly people could provide historical information about their house, or those in their neighborhoods, or direct us to those who could. Often too, they would tell us about other old buildings which we might have missed. Older residents frequently had time-faded photographs of interesting buildings, and these we copied for our collection.

Alex and I continued our field trips as time permitted during which years his work as a commercial photographer attracted increasing attention. In August of 1938 he received seven awards for the architectural and industrial photos he submitted to a national convention of the American Photographers' Association in Chicago. Our project of recording early buildings was also creating a growing interest. In 1936 Meyric R. Rogers, then director of the St. Louis City Art Museum, invited us to exhibit prints from our collection which resulted in "Domestic Architecture in Missouri before 1850" being shown from February 16 to March 1 of that year. Sometime later a similar exhibition was held at the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City. Invitations for talks on Missouri's early buildings came to me with increasing frequency.

In the summer of 1938 Alexander's health, which had always been fragile, began to fail. He passed away in St. Louis on November 10, at the age of forty. He was a remarkable artist-photographer and a kindly and courageous man.

After Alexander's death the surviving three brothers took over the studio with Paul (born in Mexico November 24, 1906; died in St. Louis August 24, 1985), the chief photographer and nominal head of the family business. Paul's energy and enthusiasm, and the artistic and technical skills he had developed, stimulated the growth in their work. He and I continued to add to the Missouri collection. In 1939 and 1940 the many pictures of early buildings that Paul took for the Works Progress Administration (WPA) Missouri, A Guide to the 'Show Me' State, of which I was the State Supervisor, were also added to the collection. During World War II Paul entered the military service as did I. Carlos and August kept the studio functioning.

After the war Paul again joined with me in adding to our Missouri collection and our collaboration continued into the 1960s and later. I was then assembling a large number of photographs to illustrate a book in preparation, The Arts and Architecture of German Settlements in Missouri, which the University of Missouri Press published in 1977. Paul took the most important of those photos and the entire group, numbering several thousand, became part of our Missouri collection.

By the late 1970s it was apparent that the studio at 3800 West Pine Boulevard, St. Louis, could no longer be continued. Carlos and Juanita had died; August was increasingly unwell. Paul was aging and had frequent periods of illness. So it was that in 1979 the studio was closed and the property sold. Paul then spent increasing amounts of time at property he owned in Mexico. In the summer of 1985 he returned ill to St. Louis where he died on August 24, aged seventy-eight. Shortly before his death the final arrangements were made for the disposition of our photographic collection.

PIAGET-VAN RAVENSWAAY COLLECTION

For more than ten years Paul and I had discussed where the collection might find an appropriate, permanent home. We agreed that it should be with an agency that would carefully preserve it, make it accessible to those interested in using it and, in all other ways, for it to receive the care we felt this unique record of Missouri's early buildings and related subjects deserved. Eventually, to our pleasure, interest in acquiring the collection and in providing extensive and costly conservation and cataloguing, came from the Division of Prints and Photographs at the Library of Congress and the Historic American Buildings Survey/Historic American Engineering Record, a division of the National Park Service, through the good offices of C. Ford Peatross, Curator of Architecture, Design, and Engineering Collection at the Library of Congress, and from Robert J. Kapsch, Chief of HABS/HAER.

It was agreed that the architectural photographs be placed in the files of the Historic American Buildings Survey, and those dealing with the fine and decorative arts -- the non-architectural pictures -- be added to the Library of Congress. With the cooperation of Paul Piaget, and of Mrs. August Piaget and her daughter Clare Piaget who donated their interest in the collection as I did mine, the files were transferred to the respective agencies in the summer of 1985. Thus the collection that had its inception about 1931, and whose creation became such an abiding interest of the Piagets and me, found its permanent home some fifty-two years later.

Checklist of the HABS - Piaget-van Ravenswaay Photograph Collection

This checklist of the HABS - Piaget-van Ravenswaay Photograph Collection includes only those structures photographed and researched by Alexander and Paul Piaget and Charles van Ravenswaay. Since HABS had previously documented some of those structures, the combined documentation is listed, with the Piaget-van Ravenswaay additions noted by hand on the computer printout. With the exception of one structure in Indiana, one structure in Iowa, and twenty-eight structures in Illinois, the checklist primarily covers approximately 550 structures in Missouri. In addition to these, HABS has also documented approximately 425 other structures in Missouri which are not included in this checklist.

The checklist is arranged alphabetically by state, then numerically by county code number (see county code number list on next page). Entries are then arranged alphabetically by city and vicinity. Within the city or vicinity, each structure is listed alphabetically by its historic name. Following the name of the structure is its computer control number, then its HABS identification number. Next are numbers under each of three categories indicating the different types of documentation found in the HABS - Piaget-van Ravenswaay Photograph Collection:

NDRW = Number of sheets of HABS measured drawings

NPHO = Number of HABS and Piaget-van Ravenswaay large format photographs.

DATP = Number of pages of written historical and descriptive data.

ADDENDA = Number of Piaget-van Ravenswaay photographs (PH) and pages of written historical and descriptive data (DATP) added to previously existing HABS records in the archival collection at the Library of Congress.
